2026 marks the inflection point where the EU plastic recycling industry becomes actionable, not aspirational

What has changed (effective February 2026)

- Advanced/chemical recycling is recognized by the EU commission as an accepted recycling pathway under EU rules
- Mass balance accounting is approved, materially improving the economics and bankability of chemical plants
- Recycled content from chemical recycling can count toward EU recycled-content targets

A key source of regulatory uncertainty that delayed capital deployment in Europe has now been removed

What is now unfolding in the market

A clear preference for EU-based recycling infrastructure is emerging as imports of recycled plastic are being constrained:

- Non-EU recycled material largely excluded until at least 2027
- Imported resins (that have depressed European prices) now face increasing scrutiny around credibility.
- Makes EU-recycled material more valuable for compliance.

European supply-demand dynamics are beginning to rebalance in favor of local, compliant capacity

AGLX's pivot to Europe retains optionality for US market and global Styrenyx deployments

GreenDot Global's three segments: Extended Producer Responsibility ("EPR" revenue from collection and recycling), production of pellets for mechanical recycling ("MR"), and production of pellets for advanced recycling ("AR"), will generate EUR 20 million EBITDA in 2026 and recycle over 300,000 tons of waste plastic through its existing operations.

Long-term upside from US advanced recycling market is retained through retention of the 50,000 tons per annum offtake agreement with ExxonMobil on substantially the same terms as the existing offtake agreement, with the potential for additional volumes, subject to commercial and regulatory considerations

GreenDot assets provide optionality to serve either US offtake commitments or fast growing EU demand where the current advanced recycling pipeline exceeds 100,000 tons per annum in demand

Styrenyx continues global development, with one licensee operating plant in Japan, sites under evaluation in Europe and US, ongoing technology collaborations, and engagement with industrial offtakers. Expect to monetize the IP in 2026 or 2027.
